Thought

I would like to lodge in the yellow sinew of a lion to be within and without of his rhythm to feel his mane
all chaffy gold and brown against the wind like the tethers of your glance
And then to flee as some gay thief alive with secrets straight to the muddy confines of your face.

Folding Hands

You have held them one in another
All of today and into the evening,
Like a tight packet of old letters Wanting to be memorized.

They are hands recently Brought back from the palmist,
Without signs of a certain future
Or the mark of a former connection.

If she had known
The language of lines
She did not offer you Any translation.

But there must be some answer
To the other side of knuckle and nail,
Not just a pattern of furrows
That increase with bending.

It is too difficult to put mysteries Face down in pockets,
Better that there be a folding of hands
One in another, to wait
For the key to a language
Or the growth of some design.

There is a singing

There is a singing
 Past the importance of gardens,
 A rising darker than commencement,
 A bridal inning.
 It is a garland
 Stammered round the sun,
 A trembling
 Turning on the whole prosperity
 Of the bones.
 A gill of seablood
 Governed beyond the bitter grass,
 The step of the broken friend,
 This is a singing
 Crowned with spines, Single in the keeping,
 This returning lover,
 The rose which speaks
 When it seems to be sleeping.
